Ultimate proves popular

workout. Another advantage is that they can roll over grates and other obstacles.

Riven, a former refrigeration and air conditioning repairman and model, is in the Northwest lining up retailers.

He has numerous pairs of the skates in the back of his pickup, and he's the kind of guy who likes to take others skating.

He took Connie Steven's daughter skating at the Celebrity Classic, and the same weekend sold a pair to Pete Carlson, who has been known to use skating as a sales gimmick.

One day Riven took the entire men's U.S. Ski Team on an outing in Sandy, prompting Carlson to comment, "I'm not going to make the Olympics. All I'm going to do is get athlete's foot."

Carlson has worn the skates while giving presentations at two different automobile dealers' conventions. The topic of both presentations was, of course, special sales gimmicks.

Carlson is currently wearing the skates until he sells 50 new cars or trucks. He wears them at work, and out in the community. He doesn't drive with them on. About the people who might think he's crazy, Carlson replies, "Who cares?"

Indeed, it wouldn't be unlike Carlson to turn around and keep the promotion going for another 50 sales.

He said, "I may go again. I'm going to get pretty good on these before I'm done." He may not get as good as Riven, however, who did a cart wheel on the skates in the Clackamas County Bank lobby.

Carlson prefers The Ultimate to traditional roller skates, and has been asked to explain the difference so many times it's "getting monotonous."

"It's just a matter of time before we get the whole country. Riven said of the marketing effort behind The Ultimate:

As for Pete Carlson, the exercise is good for him.
