Library adopts book policy

Citing a need to keep the Sandy Public Library's collection relevant to the broadest cross section of the community's population, the local library has adopted a book selection policy.

Last Monday, the Sandy City Council endorsed the policy which will help eliminate a collection being built upon the whims and biases of successive generations of librarians and the public, according to librarian Sue Newlands.

The policy is also designed to give those who develop it an opportunity to think about the library's ends—service to the public which pays for the library and the protection of individuals' rights to read what they want, she added.

Another practical value of the new statement is that it can be an effective tool answering the public's questions about the collection, often forestalling painful confrontations and attempts at suppression.

So far, the library collection has not been challenged publicly, Newlands said, although some questions have been raised and answered. The policy, she hopes, will continue that record.

Under the policy, materials will be selected for quality of content, expression, form and popular need.

Other factors will include sincerity and responsibility of opinions, factual accuracy, timeliness or current interest in subjects or titles.

Nature club screens films

A Sandy High School instructor has initiated a new club to take a closer look at nature and wildlife and study man's role in protecting it. Now, the club is opening up and inviting members of the public to become involved.

Jeanie Budd said the club, which meets each Tuesday afternon at 2:45 p.m. at the school has lined up a series of films on nature through the month of March.

She started the club to increase awareness among students and staff members about nature and devote time each week to discussing issues. She said the club could become involved in political issues, including the current wilderness legislation.

Movies and dates for the coming month are "Ecology—Olympic Rain Forest," March 8; "Of Time and A River," about the Columbia River, March 22; "Doorways to the Past," about Timberline Lodge, March 29; "Volcanic Landscapes," a study of volcanoes in the Pacific Northwest, April 5, and "About Sharks," April 12.

I count on my telephone.

No matter where your car breaks down, just pick up the phone and you've got my towing service in the palm of your hand.

My business depends on dependable phone service. Continental makes sure I get it. With new equipment, computers, and repair people who know how to fix phones fast. Like most of my customers, I don't think about service until I need it. When I do I know I can count on Continental. And that helps my customers count on me. No matter where they're calling from.

The way my customers count on me.

We put the world in the palm of your hand.
