Only these vampires could live in a mansion that has sunk into the ground. But it's the perfect place for them to hide from daylight.

The Lost Boys

A fright at night

A movie review by Beth Rasgorshek

Nobody in Santa Carla talks about the vampires terrorizing their town. But they're real — the truly scary, blood-sucking kind of vampires.

When brothers Michael (Jason Patric) and Sam (Corey Haim) move to Santa Carla with their mom, it doesn't take them long to meet the vampires. Michael, who is lonely and bored the instant he arrives in this coastal town, joins up with a mad motorcycle gang. Little does he know this night-prowling group has evil plans for his family.

Sam, who doesn't read horror comics because they scare him, soon realizes his brother is in danger. With the help of two young vampire hunters — brothers Edgar (Corey Feldman) and Alan Frog (Jamison Newlander) — Sam decides to save his brother.

That's when it gets real scary. Sam and his buddies must kill the head vampire before the vampires kill them. And it's not easy to kill the creatures created by monster maker Greg Cannom (featured in the July 29 Young American, page 7).

There's a lot of well-timed, hip humor to break up the horror. Don't be surprised to find yourself laughing while sitting scared on the edge of your seat. The movie is rated R (and it should be) for some not-so-pretty, bloody scenes.
