people lay down in busy streets to simulate Iraqis killed in air raids, while in Bogota, people marched naked through the streets.

At home, protesters came out in droves. Boston held the biggest protest since the Vietnam war, attracting tens of thousands who chanted, "This is what democracy looks like." Other cities throughout the U.S. have held major anti-war demonstrations.

ship. "The senior Bush kept his ties with the bin Laden family up until two months after Sept. 11," Moore told Variety.

The planned release of Fahrenheit 911 is in time for France's Cannes Film Festival in 2004, and just before the U.S. presidential election in November.

MOORE ON BUSH

According to Variety Online, Michael Moore, whose Bowling for Columbine won the Oscar for Best Documentary Film, is putting together a deal with actor Mel Gibson's production company to finance Fahrenheit 911, a documentary that will trace the roots of terrorism against the United States.

Variety says Moore will use his camera lens to look into the alleged dealings between two generations of the Bush and bin Laden clans, and quotes Moore as saying, "The primary thrust of the new film is what has happened to the country since Sept. 11, and how the Bush administration used this tragic event to push its agenda."

Moore told Variety the film "certainly does deal with the Bush and bin Laden ties," and "asks a number of questions that I don't have the answers to yet, but which I intend to find out."

The Variety report said that President George Bush I and Saudi construction magnate Mohammed bin Laden, the father of Osama — had a longterm business relation-
