Dance BY RACHAEL CARNES

Gabe Masson

NYC Meets PDX

East/West choreography at UO

A bi-coastal offering jumps on the boards when the UO Dance Department presents new and recent works by New York-based choreographer Gabriel Masson and Portland dance artist Linda K. Johnson on Nov. 11 and 12.

Masson's career as a dancer and choreographer spans 20 years, after he wandered into a modern dance class in Mississippi and found his calling. "I was home," he says.

Masson has toured with Dance Olympians Lucinda Childs and Doug Varone. At the UO concert, he presents "A Story About Apples," his latest exploration of the multimedia format he's investigated in recent years. This premiere performance features Masson with UO alumna Sarah Ebert, whose move to Portland has left a void on Eugene stages. Her lyrical but grounded style can't be beat. Catch her in Masson's solo, "Inevitable," set to a Philip Glass violin concerto. Masson, whose élan as a performer is matched by his inquisitive nature as an artist, will also offer a new solo, "The Day Before Yesterday," to a score by Guy Klucsevsek.

Johnson will premiere "What Remains ... Requiem," a solo developed while in residency at the Caldera artist's retreat program in Blue Lake, Ore. Johnson, who calls herself a "dance-based artist" has created place-based performance in the Northwest for 13 years. She received national attention and praise for her site-specific reclamation of a scrubby traffic circle in Portland that she adopted for a year to nurture as a garden. The culminating action-art drew attention to how much of our suburban and urban landscape stands fallow and unappreciated, while sprawl sprawls. If you bemoan the seeming disconnects between art and politics, you'll find Johnson's work savvy and refreshing.

Dougherty Dance Theatre on the third floor of the Gerlinger Annex opens at 7:30 pm for the 8 pm show on Friday and Saturday. Tickets are available at the door; $10 general admission, $5 students and seniors. Limited seating. EW
