IT ONLY took seven twists of the twine before Bill was able to make his finger turn purple. He held his hand up next to his eye to watch it pulse and turn an even darker shade. "Cool!" he said through bloodied lips. "wait till mom sees this!" He wiped his mouth on the knee of his pants and carefully stood. He twisted the twine one last turn and ran a few feet through the yard towards the front door. At the stoop he covered. His father was slouched in the doorway. As usual, his pants were off, his cap was off center, and his huge fingers were wrapped around a bottle of cherry cough syrup. If only his finger weren't wrapped, he'd take that syrup.
