state regulatory review and frequent judicial appeals.

If the city expands the UGB, developers and speculators could make huge profits by buying cheap land zoned for farm or forest use and then having the city suddenly rezone it for pricey home lots.

Development interests are pushing for the city to move toward expanding its UGB by updating its land supply survey years before required to do so by state law. The city's current survey estimates that it has a "generous surplus" of commercial and industrial land and a "modest surplus" of residential land within the UGB. Those surveys are not required to be updated until 2010 or 2015.

Eugene's UGB has historically been set so far out that it has created little impetus for increased infill and density, a major city goal. Since 1950, Eugene's population density has declined 29 percent. — Alan Pittman

AGAINST PATRIARCHY RETURNS

After a hiatus of several years, the Against Patriarchy conference will take place again on the UO campus. The event will feature workshops on topics such as body image, fertility awareness, sex workers, radical love and a discussion of the histories of activism in Eugene.

The conference kicks off at 6 pm Friday, May 4, in the EMU Fir Room with a talk by Noël Sturgeon. Surgeon is a professor of Women's Studies at Washington State University and author of the book Ecofeminist Natures: Race, Gender, Feminist Theory and Political Action. Sturgeon will be speaking on the "Nature of Environmental Reproductive Justice."

In her book Sturgeon defines ecofeminism as "a feminist rebellion within male-dominated radical environmentalism," which fits right into the themes of the conference.

sprawl quid pro quo. Councilors Bonny Bettman, Betty Taylor, Andrea Ortiz and Alan Zelenka and Mayor Piercy voted against sprawl and for parks. Councilors Mike Clark, Jennifer Solomon, George Poling and Chris Pryor voted against parks and for sprawl.

The Register-Guard followed up with an editorial that week endorsing the argument of no parks without sprawl.

The Homebuilders Association of Lane County has opposed parks for taking away land for development and for the systems development charges they have to pay for them. Last year the homebuilders lobbied against a $27 million parks measure, but the measure passed with 59 percent voting yes.

If the no-parks-without-sprawl policy is adopted, park acquisition under the measure could come to a standstill. Expanding the UGB is a complicated process involving required public hearings, complicated studies,
