

OUTDOORS

Waldo, a bit farther away...

who turn this beautiful area into a full-scale re-enactment of the Normandy invasion in the summer months. There are a few protected areas where you can enjoy peace and quiet.

1. Waldo Lake

Waldo Lake is a natural resource of truly global significance. The 10-square-mile lake surface makes it the largest natural water body in western Oregon, and it's the second deepest. More importantly, because of the large size of the lake relative to the size of the basin it drains and because it has no permanent inlet, Waldo contains literally the purest H₂O in the world. Waldo's vast volume of water is what scientists call "ultraoligotrophic" — a fancy word that means that the water is very unproductive, supporting little or no biological activity. The bottled water you buy at the store is probably dirtier. The Forest Service in this case deserves a lot of credit for the recent decision to prohibit gas motors to protect this priceless wonder of Lane County. You can drive there on Waldo Lake Road just west of Willamette Pass. EW
