could be held. The trees were cut, and Broadway Place, an apartment complex with retail stores and parking garages was built.

The police cut open the pants of one of the treesitters, Jim Flynn, and sprayed his anus and genitals, an act Amnesty International called "torture." Tear gas and pepper spray were also used against the surrounding crowd.

Flynn said in an email message, "It made me realize that the EPD does not protect public safety, they protect the interests of the developers." He said, "They just wanted me out of that tree by any means necessary with no concern for my life."

Flynn and two other protestors sued the

PEPPER SPRAY ANNIVERSARY

On Friday, June 1, it will be exactly 10 years since the 1997 spraying incident in which 11 activists climbed trees to delay the cutting of 40 of the largest trees in downtown Eugene.

The Eugene Police Department sprayed every can of pepper spray they had on the protestors and borrowed more cans from Springfield and Lane County.

The protestors were attempting to delay the cutting of the trees for one day, until a public hearing
