We can get it too!

HIV does not discriminate!

With HIV/AIDS reversing the trends in life expectancy in many poor countries and with new diseases like SARS and avian flu doing the rounds each year, international health has become a hot topic of discussion and study. Together with that, people have come to understand the importance of socioeconomic development and the part it plays in a population's health. Globalization has also brought about interdependence between states in matters relating to public health. Health is thus a main component of the United Nations Millennium Development Goals. The World Health Organization recognizes health not just as a goal in itself, but a key development input for other goals. A study of health and its linkages with development thus becomes not only important but very exciting too.
