As time goes on, a media-perpetrated conglomeration of incorrect assumptions, identities and images surrounding Asia and the Pacific Islands continues to form an ethnocentric and sorely misinformed perspective of what is, in reality, a rich and diverse culture. Thankfully, the folks behind the DisOrient Asian and Pacific Islander American Film Festival of Oregon know the power of media as well, as they've been demonstrating for six years with a grass-roots film festival. Entirely volunteer run, the annual festival uses film as a medium for healing and inciting change. This year's festival showcases 11 films that display the experiences of humans as they truly occur – not as false media portrayals that keep people of Asian and South Pacific descent locked in a cage of "oriental" stereotypes. DisOrient runs all weekend at Bijou Arts Cinema; for times and prices, visit bijou-cinema.com.
