

three remaining high schools [and] look at any unintended consequences that we may not have been ware of when we passed this.” The work session will be March 13.

Berman expressed surprise at the opposition to the 3x5, given opportunities last year to comment. “The necessity of moving to one schedule was primary,” he said, and 30 educators met for more than 40 hours, held forums, met at schools and decided to institute the 3x5.

But Berman also noted his concern about the incompatibility of the IHS schedule with music. He said he is exploring with principals a number of ways students don’t have to face that choice.

“This was not an economic decision,” Berman said. “It was a decision to really advance the interest of student performance and our own professional staff so that they could collaborate across systems and build a stronger unity and a stronger system.” — Anne Bridgman
