DAILY PAPER FILES CASE AGAINST THE COUNTY

Months after county administrator Liane Richardson was fired over changes she made to her pay, Lane County citizens still don't know the whole story about what happened. Various news organizations, including Eugene Weekly, made public records requests for copies of the outside investigation by USO Consulting that examined the circumstances surrounding the compensation changes, but the county hasn't released it in an unredacted form. The investigation found that Richardson violated county policy, but the county never gave any more details. The Register-Guard appealed the decision to withhold the full report to Lane County District Attorney Alex Gardner and was turned down.

Lane County argued that it was required under state law to protect the identities of whistleblowing employees and that a section of Oregon's public records law allows an agency to keep an investigation secret and only release a condensed version of the signifi-
