If you're dreaming of a visit to Hawaii but can't quite chalk up the money for a plane ticket, Island Arts, a local learning center for Native Hawaiian, Asian and Pacific Islander traditional music and dance, is there for you. At the New Year's Aloha Jam FUNdraiser on Saturday, Jan. 11, immerse in a series of performances, including opportunities for collaboration. Community members can join in with ukulele, guitar or voice while getting exposed to a wider variety of Hawaiian art forms. "Here on the mainland, people are not familiar with many types of hula, so this is actually a way to bring awareness to the community that it's not just one type of dance," says Kumu Iwalani, cultural and music director for Island Arts and the band Sweet Aloha. "There are so many facets to the culture." In addition to music and dancing, Iwalani says a bake sale and silent auction will also help support this local oasis of island culture.

New Year's Aloha Jam FUNdraiser is 1-4pm Saturday, Jan. 11, at River Road Annex, 1055 River Road Ave. Don. — Amy Schneider
