A walk up Skinner Butte might yield a rare glimpse of a bald eagle, but elephants, rhinos and gorillas are a bit out of Oregon's reach. Pictures are the next best thing, and luckily, Future Generations Graduate School professor Bob Fleming is giving a lecture, "From the Impenetrable Forests to the Namib Desert: Biodiversity in Sub-Saharan Africa," on Friday, March 21. Having spent his life exploring the Himalayan Mountain System and learning about the biodiversity in 10 regions of Africa, Fleming has a lot of wildlife viewing under his belt, and he's sharing his experiences for free. Live vicariously and learn why sub-Sarahan animals are in need of saving.
