

It hits me like a slap across the face to realize that Prodigy’s The Fat of the Land is almost 20 years old. Where did the time go? The way The Who’s miserable 1982 single “Eminence Front” drags my mind back through time and forces it to replay scenes from my childhood, there are adults roaming the streets today for whom the controversial radio pop hit “Smack My Bitch Up” triggers some of life’s earliest memories. The Brussels-born producer Apashe is one such adult. But, instead of feeling mortified, he’s delighted — possibly even somewhat grateful to Prodigy’s oeuvre. “There was no ‘before’ electronic music for me,” Apashe told The Music Ninja last year. “I was born in 1992. I’ve always been into electronic music. My dad used to listen to plenty of musical genres: classic, jazz, metal, as well as electronic music. I can’t remember the first time I heard a Prodigy track, but I’m sure I was hearing it before I even knew what music was.” It makes perfect sense once you listen to the loud, surging, melodic stomp of Apashe’s “No Twerk.” And I’m led to wonder how much gratitude we owe other long forgotten ‘90s acts like Prodigy for the aggressive, buzzing dance music offshoot genres of the day. Thank-you card’s in the mail.

Apashe performs with Benny Rox at 9pm Thursday, June 18, at Granary Pizza, 259 E. 5th Ave.; tickets are $15-$20.—Ben Ricker
