

WHAT'S HAPPENING

There's every good reason to think The Dandy Warhols are a poser band. Firstly, that name. Secondly, they're most known for a single whose central lyrics are "I'm feeling so bohemian like you, yeah, I like you!" But whatever. The Dandy Warhols are a Portland rock standby, and they're fun. In fact, it's one of those bands that is more about its image, its "thing," than the thing that is its music. In the late '90s, when the band first started gigging regularly in Portland dives (ah, yes, when Portland "dives" still existed), the shows were notorious for their rampant psychedelia use, nudity, thrashing, et cetera. This comes as a moderate surprise, considering the innocent, Brit-pop vibe of the Dandys' earlier tunes. The band's debut album, Dandys Rule OK, for example, is a simple, straight-ahead rock affair that's basically about being in a band and hanging out with friends. That said, each album since has grown progressively more sincere and garage-y, defying the normative rock-band progression of lo-fi to polished. The question that remains is what, exactly, the Dandys have to say. The band's "message," if it can be called that, ranges from explicit encouragement of sex and drugs to a declaration of Nietzsche's goddess earth. When at a Dandy Warhols show, though, none of that matters. Where the band really shines is its harmonies, its fast-and-forward-driving drums, its "oooohs," "yeahs" and "babys." You'll have a good time. They always do.

L.A.'s rock outfit The Shelters join The Dandy Warhols 8pm Wednesday, Nov. 4, at WOW Hall; $20 adv., $25 door. All ages.
