

Underground filmmakers Mike and George Kuchar never went to film school — and it shows. The twin brothers barely graduated high school, they say. But they went to the movies almost nightly and their young brains were marinated in the overdone Hollywood melodramas of the '50s. Before they were even teenagers, Mike and George Kuchar became obsessed with the silver screen and began making their own campy, beautiful, shitty “no budget” cinematic masterpieces. The Jordan Schnitzer Museum of Art screens It Came from Kuchar Wednesday. The 2009 documentary is a who's who of independent and underground cinema. It tells the Kuchars' story, features clips from their outlandish films and shows the brothers at work on dozens of cheap slapdash movies. Watching them work is the best part. It looks fun. They just sort of make it up as they go along. “My pictures are never written out before hand,” Mike Kuchar says. “I find out what they're about as I make them.” If he's lucky, that is.

It Came from Kuchar begins 7pm Wednesday, Nov. 4, at JSMA, UO campus; FREE. — Ben Ricker
