presented at the Schnitzer Museum and Karin Clark Gallery. Finally, an excellent start toward preservation of local art history would be informative catalogs of exhibitions presented in our own community.

REDESIGNING EUGENE

When a local property manager and vocal supporter of MUPTE suddenly disappeared, we learned that he managed 500-plus properties and had clients from throughout the U.S. and all over the world. Unfortunately, investors seem to have set their sights on Eugene as an opportunity — especially a corporate opportunity for multi-storied housing.

Many changes are being proposed: the proposed rezoning of 474 homes in south Eugene with 83 pages of very complicated changes — a pilot program for the rest of the city; the development of Kesey Square; the changing of South Willamette from four lanes to three, etc.

It has been good to see that attendance in neighborhood associations is at an all-time high. Eugene residents are more involved than ever in the issues and changes that could redesign our city. Capstone is a visual reminder that accountability is needed. Thank you, EW, for your recent articles.

WTF?

Who the fuck is Rick Levin and why the fuck can't he use a more creative and illustrative verb than "fuck" in the subtitle of a movie review [1/28]? Please buy him a fucking thesaurus or send him to the fucking J-School to learn some fucking new words.

This paper should be for everyone, not just the fuckety fucks. Love,

CLIMATE CHAMPION

The Weekly has done the city a service with Camilla Mortensen's two recent pieces on climate change at the city level ("Get Your Ordinance in Order," Dec. 31) and at the state level ("Climate Politics," Jan. 29). Mortensen has demonstrated that we badly need capable leadership on these issues at all levels of government.

So I must say that I found it surprising that this week's Slant on the Ward 1 race completely overlooked candidate Joshua Skov's climate cred. Skov is a climate champion and a seasoned professional with the political chops necessary to make progress on climate change as well as other pressing issues.

Skov serves on the Eugene Budget Committee, and he served on the Sustainability Commission for five years. Skov teaches sustainable business topics at the UO and supports better transit by serving on the board of advisers of BEST (Better Eugene-Springfield Transit) and LTD's EmX Steering Committee.

Skov has been an outspoken supporter of wise land use in Eugene and over the last decade has appeared regularly at council to push for climate action. Skov has demonstrated that he has the drive and experience we need to move Eugene forward on many issues, including climate action.

He's got my support for the open Ward 1 seat and deserves a close look by all who care about climate change. And keep up the excellent coverage of climate issues!

SERVES THEM RIGHT

The same City Council that cheated past and future generations of Eugeneans by demolishing old City Hall, now finds itself without offices in the new City Hall. Maybe they should hang out with the "travelers" and learn some manners.
