

WHAT'S HAPPENING

It's still hard to believe he's really gone. A generation of hardcore Bowie fanatics first knew the mystical British rock god as Jareth, the sexed up Goblin King from Jim Henson's 1986 fantasy cult classic Labyrinth. As kids we thought Labyrinth was neat, but a second glance reveals an avante-garde coming of age story about a girl wending her way through a sinister network of sticky tunnels crawling with grabby Muppets who sometimes play too rough for her comfort, and ours. Jennifer Connelly plays Sarah, a teenager trying desperately to rescue her baby brother before a kinky Goblin King turns him into a monster. Exactly why Jareth collects children is never made expressly clear, though we see him wearing high leather boots and twirling a riding crop in his hands as he contemplates the newest addition to his menagerie. Despite its PG-rating, Labyrinth — which screens Thursday, March 10, at the Wildish Theater — is every bit as freaky as David Bowie's glam rock masterpiece The Rise and Fall of Ziggy Stardust and the Spiders from Mars. Before Sarah's final showdown with Jareth at the center of the M.C. Escher-inspired maze, furry red creatures try pulling her head off, she falls down a blackened pit filled with talking knobby fingers and her troll friend slips her a Mickey. Whether we're talking about sexually ambiguous pop stars or children's movies: they just don't make 'em like they used to.

Labyrinth begins 6:30pm Thursday, March 10, at the Wildish Theater, 630 Main St., Springfield; FREE. — Ben Ricker
