

For the first time in three years, four regional peace choirs will come together in Eugene for a reunion concert called Let Peace Begin with Me. The peace choir movement in our region, according to Eugene Peace Choir coordinator Julia Linebarger-Taylor, started in 1984 with two sisters. "They protested the shipment of toxic stuff by train through Eugene. They got on the tracks and sang in protest." The peace choir movement sprang from there, and as members left the region they started their own choirs in other parts of the valley. "These four choirs get together annually for what we call our multi-choir concert," Linebarger-Taylor says. "There's probably going to be about 130 singers." She adds that the annual concert, which rotates cities each year, has packed halls in other venues. All the songs have messages of peace, social justice or environmental sustainability, she says. "I like that our group has a purpose beyond just enjoying each other's singing." She says that all the choirs welcome new members, so feel free to reach out after the concert if you like what you see.
