Reaching far back and tapping into that original font of American pop — everything from the percussive jolt of Jerry Lee Lewis to the proto-rockabilly of Buddy Holly to the bluesy croon of Elvis — Eugene’s own Daddy Rabbit unabashedly bucks the latest fads in favor of orthodox, old-fashioned rock-and-roll done the way Grammy and Gramps liked it. Jangly guitars, mainline bass-lines and jaunty backbeats are put to service in rave ups about girls, good times and rock-’n’-roll itself — subjects that, despite endless twee variations and inversions, remain the staple subjects in the canon of unreconstructed pop. Hot off the presses, Daddy Rabbit’s latest album, *Born to Rock and Roll, is a collection of sock-hoppers and boogie-woogies that beckon you to hit the floor and forget your troubles, if just for a night. The album, produced by Beau Eastlund, was recorded in a single day this past May, and the spitfire energy shows. Guitarist/vocalist Robert Jacobs says the choice of music genre, as well as the rapid manner of laying it down, is entirely intentional. “This particular music has its own form of energy, its own propulsion,” Jacobs says of the three-piece that also includes drummer Steve Wright and bassist Marty Garber. “Punk’s awesome, but it doesn’t swing. Rock is great, but it’s kind of slow; it really rocks but it doesn’t roll. When we play this music, people dance. Every show we’ve played, people have danced at.”

Daddy Rabbit celebrates its CD release 8pm Saturday, March 4, at Mac’s at the Vet’s Club; $5, 21 and older. — Rick Levin
