

You probably know Glenn Kotche as the drummer who's helped reboot Wilco since joining that band in 2001. But he's so much more. A noted composer and solo artist, he's appeared on 80-plus albums and collaborated with Kronos Quartet, So Percussion, eighth blackbird, Bang on a Can, John Luther Adams, Andrew Bird, cellist Maya Beiser and more. Now Kotche is working with a quartet of fellow Grammy winners — classically trained percussionists and Chicagoans called Third Coast Percussion — along with a video artist and stage director, plus engineering students and faculty at Notre Dame University, in one of the most spectacular music/theater collaborations of the decade. Wild Sounds is a 2017 Grammy-winning multimedia project that marries field recordings of natural and human sounds with live performances on DIY electronic instruments constructed and deconstructed onstage during the performance. In one case, Kotche wrote the music and the students built an electronic instrument (involving Plexiglas sheet, bolts, and conductive glove) to play it. Even the audience might get in on the fun. And yet for all the concepts and impromptu gadgets and engineering involved, reviews have praised Wild Sound's fun, even organic, qualities as both music and theater. If you enjoy Stomp!, percussion, contemporary music and truly original combinations of sound and vision, electronics and acoustics, Wild Sound sounds like a fascinating trip.

Wild Sound: Third Coast Percussion and Glenn Kotche plays at 8 pm Saturday, April 15, at the Hult Center's Silva Concert Hall. Tickets are $28-$48.25 at HultCenter.org. — Brett Campbell
