

In the 1980s and '90s Susan Dietrich Schneider performed on street corners in Boston and San Francisco, as The Space Lady. Playing originals and tripped-out, no-fidelity covers of rock classics like Steppenwolf’s “Born to be Wild” on a Casiotone keyboard. She sang in a soprano, wore a silver plastic helmet with white wings and a flashing red light on top and insisted in her early 20s she’d been abducted by aliens. She never recorded more than the assorted home-made CD or cassette, but nevertheless ended up on the outsider music comp Songs in the Key of Z, cementing her legacy amongst crate-digging record nerds. Peel back the legend though, and find Schneider a kind of rough-hewn Laurie Anderson or Yoko Ono. In other words, beyond her excellent weirdo biography, The Space Lady is actually pretty good.

The Space Lady appears 7 pm Wednesday, September 20 at Moon Rock Records, 227 West 8th Avenue; FREE. — Will Kennedy
