Cascadia Quest is a local nonprofit that facilitates rites of passage camps — nature-based coming of age camps for boys ages 14-18; the organization is planning on having its first girls' camp this summer, says Rob Miller, Cascadia Quest's founder, program designer and lead guide. Cascadia Quest also offers mentorships for young people, facilitates grief song ceremonies and other nature and personal growth-based trips like "vision fasts" for adults — a "vision quest" in which someone goes alone into nature and fasts for three days, according to the its website. Cascadia Quest is holding its only dedicated fundraising event for the year, the Season of Light Gathering and Fundraiser, 6-9 pm Friday, Dec. 15, at Unity of the Valley (3912 Dillard Road). Suggested donation for the event is a sliding scale of $1-$20. The fundraiser is open to everyone and is set up to give the community a taste of what the organization is about. "Our goal is to give people the opportunity to experience what we are good at: creating a warm, supportive, engaged environment for folks to connect with each other and have fun," Miller says. The event will have several stations based on aspects of human nature: a challenging rope game to address physical strength, an "Elders Booth" to sit with a wise elder and hear and reflect on stories, a chance to make nature-based gifts and other activities. There will also be a bake sale and presentation about rites of passage and mentorship. "Traditional cultures across the world have had some means of challenging a young person and making their transition into adulthood in a meaningful and effective way," Miller says. "We hope through events like this we can get the word out and attract more youth and adults to this type of work." For more information, visit CascadiaQuest.org. — Meerah Powell
