We the PEOPLE

From "I" to "We": The Role of the Citizen-Critic

Margo Jefferson, in describing her talk, writes: "'We the People' is an affirmation, but it's a provocation too. It provokes each of us as individuals, as 'I's who cherish our particular identities, to think about how those identities can join forces in a community. And by 'forces' I mean beliefs, achievements and dreams, but also uncertainties and conflicts: histories and traditions that often clash. 'We the People' are a nation of communities and cultures struggling hard to make sense of one another.

What kind of 'we' is worth dreaming of and working for?"
