

Artifact Extracts

EMERGING CANNABIS PROCESSOR

Founded in December 2017, Artifact Extracts is proving to be one of Oregon's top cannabis-processing companies. Not only do they have an experienced team of people operating the Eugene-based lab, they've created a brand that appeals to hash enthusiasts and a business plan set for success.

Products on the shelves of local dispensaries range from live resin to over 85 percent THC crystals to high terpene extract cartridges and more.

Raising a startup is never easy business. Licensing, securing capital, dedication, long hours and finding a good location for processing or manufacturing are just a few ingredients that bring an idea to reality. Like most startups — and especially those in the cannabis industry — Artifact Extracts has run into some obstacles, but the team has maintained a strong vision and made modifications to the plan along the way. In just eight months they've brought a viable, high-quality product to market at a reasonable price.

As the company continues to grow, research and development are a priority. One of the company's goals is to provide diversity in production selection, bringing slightly different products to market and improving the choices consumers are offered. "We're able to do this because we're constantly trying new methods of extraction and post-processing," explains Natalie Raulin, Artifact's marketing director.

The appealing brand Artifact Extracts is delivering to customers is rooted in a humble passion for the cannabis plant. The company is also dedicating a lot of time and resources to product packaging. "Oregon Liquor Control Commission regulations cast a big net of rules around cannabis product packaging," Raulin says "Not only is it important to get the packaging and labels right for OLCC, we want to get the packaging right for our customers, since a lot about our brand and the product can be communicated through the packaging."

While Artifact Extracts is still in early startup stage, and the final packaging is not yet complete, the products can be found in more than 50 retail locations throughout Oregon, including Portland, Salem, McMinnville, Corvallis, the Willamette Valley, Veneta and the Oregon Coast.
