colored book paper, and bound in a gray leatherette cover, gives pertinent facts concerning the school year, just ended.

Assisted by Miss Woodward, faculty adviser, departments included: administration, which illustrated and told of the faculty; classes, which gave each class, class officers, history, and of course the senior class prophecy. in. Athletics wound up the departments. Generously patronized by advertisers, the book was complete in details.

With the background of this year's experience, already students plan for a bigger and more complete issue next year, when all departments will be enlarged.

Also current talk among students is the publication of some sort of newspaper next year. No definite plans have been made, but it is generally conceded that a twice-a-month publication may be the thing the students will decide next fall.

Just before Mr. Horner left Brookings for his vacation, he asked the Pilot for a "section" next year for school news, which will be an added feature of the newspaper.
