

"UNREAL REALITIES" IN THIS AMAZING AMERICA

RAINMAKERS

Near Gallup, New Mexico, the Hopi Indians every year put on weird ceremonial dances, with snakes in their mouths, while they pray to their gods for rain. Strangely enough, it usually does rain soon after the dances end.

LAKE IN A VOLCANO

A lake six miles long and four miles wide lies in the crater of a volcano that died centuries ago. Crater Lake, Oregon, is over 6,000 feet above sea level, has no known inlet or outlet, and never freezes.

CARRYING A NATION

For every hour of every day 23,000 people ride Greyhound buses—over half a million daily. In nine months 148½ million passengers (more than the entire population of the U. S.) ride by Greyhound throughout America.

Cape Farrello

Mr. and Mrs. Harold Moad and Betty of Langlois, Jack Griffin and Anna Mae Edgington of Portland were Fourth visitors at the Dolph Moad home.

Ralph Young's father and sister, Mrs. John Dawson, have returned recently from a visit at San Diego.

A Letter

Members of Coos Electric Co-op:

While we are getting more and more materials each week, still we find ourselves short of many of those "vital" and absolutely necessary items which permit completion of any portion of our new construction.

Insulators, those apparently insignificant, and useless looking appendages which hold the wires on the cross-arms, are shy of the necessary number. We are short items, too, but these hold up almost all the construction, which should be all performed at once instead of having to re-trace our construction a number of times.

The present construction crew consists of 8 men. When our stock of materials permits, this number will be increased to the limit to complete the job as quickly as possible.
