Community Should Have Ambulance!

There is a need, in this community of over 3000 people, for an ambulance—one which none can deny the demand for even at this moment. According to Dr. A. O. Schmitt, there is, at the present time, an average of one emergency a week.

Daily, if not in this immediate community, there are accidents. Many of these accidents are serious, some more than others, but seldom is a week without an accident, even in this community. Other emergencies might arise from any of these: fractures, appendicitis, hemorrhages, heart attacks, burns, and any number of things which render people unable to stand a trip to the hospital in an ordinary automobile, if one could be arranged.

In discussing the need for an ambulance in this community, Dr. Schmitt claimed that the investment need not tax anyone to any great extent—a station wagon, with a rear door, and so arranged with suspension hooks from the roof to hold two stretchers, with sufficient space to allow a person to ride there in addition, for administering relief, if such is necessary.

A man with a broken arm can ride in a car without too much distress, but how about one with a broken leg, hip, back, or one suffering internal injuries—no common automobile can accommodate that person and permit him to rest while being taken to a hospital?

In this community of over 3000 people, these are represented by some 500 families. Basing the cost of an ambulance, or station wagon in this case, at $2000 fully equipped, that would mean a per family investment of $4.00, if this amount were to be raised by popular subscription. That might mean saving of several lives in the course of a year—but human lives cannot be measured in money, for if having this ambulance saved but one life, the cost would amply be repaid. Dr. Schmitt maintains that a fully equipped station wagon could be bought and equipped for $1500—and the ambulance could be left at a central location, where telephone and driver would be available, and the community would be assured of equipment at all hours, with any individual expense.
