Lots Of Shoulders For Lots of Work!

Brookings, through organization of the Azalea Festival Association, stands in line to become one of the famous spots of the globe, through national advertising of the annual Azalea Festival. When anyone hears the name: "Pendleton," naturally it comes to them that Pendleton is the place where they stage those famous round-ups. Portland is associated with the Rose Festival; Cheyenne, Wyo., for the annual stampedes, and so on. Brookings has that to look forward to, if local people put effort into this event.

It will take work, plenty of work, some joy and perhaps many disappointments, before the world will finally know all about the azaleas, especially if people are to associate that name with this immediate area. It will take money to accomplish this feat—and to earn this money will take effort—plenty of effort.

Shortly, perhaps in the next month or six weeks, members of the Azalea Festival Association may call on many business establishments of the area—perhaps a suggestion will be made for beautifying the main street, it may be a request that a flower box, or a shrub be planted at a spot where the whole picture could be made one of beauty instead of one which has no appeal.

In order, fully to realize the benefits which the annual Azalea Festival can be to the community, the entire community must, by all means, give absolute and whole-hearted support to the venture.

Success of this event depends exactly upon that support!

By Their Schools They'll Be Known!

With opening of the schools, Monday, commences again the biggest business in the area. That's right, folk, the biggest business, and with most at stake.

Forgetting for the moment the money involved to run this business, let's take a look at the manufacturing plant. Let's look at the work which is laid out to be accomplished within the next nine months: In the local high school, 72 have enrolled. These must be prepared for college, or at least half-way prepared for life; in the grade schools, there are over 175 students who must be prepared for high school—must be given those fundamentals of education which will serve them throughout life.

Since the schools involve the future citizens of the world, there certainly must be no half-way measures in their preparation for life. Physical equipment necessary to this preparation should be purchased, even at a sacrifice to others in the community. Every aid should be given the faculty in order that the children receive the fullest measure of education possible to give.

A community is judged by the schools it keeps, so it might be well to strive for the best school in county right here!
