Farm Fire Toll Is Heavy In Oregon

More care from day to day in preventing fires is the surest way to cut down the annual number of farm houses burned, which in Oregon alone totaled 1586 in 1945, says M. G. Huber, fire prevention week chairman for OSC extension service. Studies show that 90 per cent of all fires are preventable.

An average of more than four farm houses in Oregon burned every day last year, either partially or completely, causing a loss of $812,345 in money value, to say nothing of the extreme difficulty of replacing these at this time. In addition there were 385 fires in farm barns and other buildings with a loss of $536,932.

Here are some of the ABCs of fire prevention listed by Huber for fire prevention, to run not only during fire prevention week, but all 52 in the year:

Put out lighted matches and cigarettes. Never throw them away when lighted.

Replace worn and frayed electric cords.

Eliminate all accumulations of rubbish about the place.

Vertical openings in buildings spread fire unless closed off.

Educate children in simple rules of fire prevention.

Never smoke in bed.

Train every man, woman and child in what to do in case of a fire.

Fix all defective flues and chimneys about the place.

Inspect basements, and other places where fires frequently begin, and clean them up.

Remove all paper, trash and other combustibles from near the stoves or furnaces.

Examine and maintain fire extinguishers.

Safeguard all matches from rodents and small children.

Steel Barge Towed To Port Orford

tug off-shore near Coos Bay on Monday evening, was, Tuesday, towed to Port Orford, it was told over the radio, Wednesday noon.

A steel barge, loaded at Portland and bound for San Francisco, which broke loose from its

What the barge was loaded with and other details were not revealed in the broadcast.

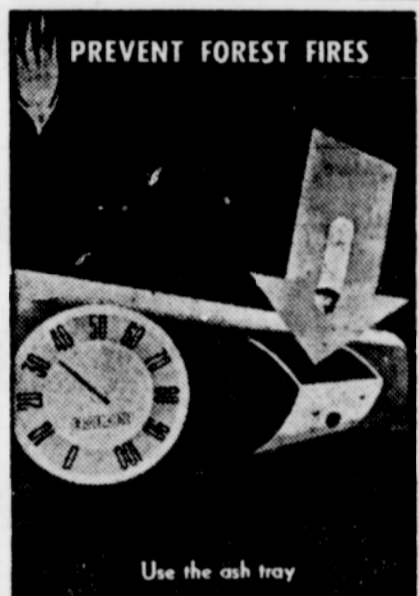

Fog has been hanging out at sea for several days and it was reported that this barge was undiscovered for some time, finally to be located by airplane.

Ed Hoar, for the first time in his life, got a four-point buck early Wednesday morning on the ride east of Harbor. Ed says that doubters may see evidence by going to Brookings Market cooler.

Members of Coos Electric Co-op:

We have, during the past week, received some badly-needed items for our local construction, such as "dead-end" insulators, "spool" insulators and other types of materials which have not been coming in, in any great amount., yet holding up our local construction.

"Dead-end" insulators could not be substituted with any other type--and much construction delay resulted. "Spool" insulators are used to run service from poles to houses--and were holding up construction, no end.

Large sub-station transformers, to be installed at the state line, are slated to be on the site the latter part of November, anyway, in plenty of time to be ready for the 66,000-volt current of California-Oregon Power Co., to be delivered at the state line, as soon as that company has built its line to the sub-station..
