

EVERYTHING IS HERE

Southwestern Oregon, in addition to being one of the most scenic spots in the world, offers opportunities in many lines of endeavor, such as timber, timber products, re-manufacturing plants, motels and such businesses which cater to tourist travel, recreational spots, and homesites for people who wish to retire in a climate that is uniform throughout the 12 months of each year.

For information concerning opportunities, people who are interested may obtain all facts from either Brookings-Harbor Chamber of Commerce, or Brookings-Harbor Pilot. Classified advertisements appearing in the Pilot oftentimes offer opportunities for any home-seeker, or one interested in any of the aforementioned endeavors.

Some time the latter part of May each year, this area observes the annual Azalea Festival. There could be no better time selected than to attend this function and to make investigation either prior to or following this event. Plan this very thing.

There are, in this section, opportunities for those who wish to make investments for expansion of industries already here. This expansion is predicated upon the belief that people are leaving congested districts to locate in a country yet untouched by any big amount of development.

Pete J. Lesmeister, president of the chamber of commerce, is in his own right able to give data concerning any question anyone may have. He is one of area's leading real estate dealers. His study of the area and its needs, together with findings of a special committee from the chamber of commerce, have uncovered many facts which will be of interest to all who may be looking for a new location, or for a place to make profitable investments.

The view above, taken in the famed Azalea Park, is typical of the beauty of this area. Crops grow here practically every day of the year, with only for a few hours this past winter seeing temperatures as low as freezing in this entire area.
