

Sense And Some NONSENSE

By Dewey

Without doubt, Sunday set a new record for the west coast north of San Diego for temperature in this area. Coats were few and conspicuous by their absence on the backs of both men and women.

Joe Bush, before departing for Parker, Arizona, was loud in his praise of the climate in this immediate area, especially as he viewed the numbers of boxes of daffodil blooms being shipped to other points from this area. "You simply can't beat this climate."

This week marks quite an event in the history of the Pilot when it becomes a legal newspaper, and becomes an institution which may outlive many editors and ownerships. After any newspaper gains its "legality" and meet the needs of the community in which they are published, rarely do they ever cease publication. In older cities and towns of the nation, it is nothing to see many newspapers which are boasting a half century of continuous publication.

Like man, newspapers are virile, alive and contain a soul. On the other hand, newspapers outlive mortal man and become institutions much like banks, public schools and such. Newspapers are necessary to the growth and progress of any community. They chronicle and record all happenings, preserve, as it were, a history of the community which they serve.

Conducted along the proper lines, newspapers mold public opinion, not so much by the editorial policy, as by the unbiased publication of news. Newspapers which do not give unbiased rethe freedoms of man—"Freedom of speech and press." Stifle these freedoms, and the world will be lost immediately.

It is true that newspapers often contain news that people believe should be suppressed. In a few scattered incidents that may be true, especially in cases of youth, where publicity might be more detrimental. However, a newspaper must remember that readers subscribe to obtain the news, and demand this function on the part of the publication.

America is great today as a nation because of her newspapers and the freedom under which they work. Newspaper men, especially those ambitious ones, do like to write copy. This "right" of newspapers has kept many a person or group of persons "in line."

Two new businesses are opening their doors in this area this week, and both have justified the existence they hope to maintain by offering the best in their lines. Without a doubt, the Vincent Fountain-Restaurant and Gift Shop would be a credit to any metropolitan area, to say nothing about the small town.

D. and E. Radio and Electric Co., under management of Archie Diment and Bob Cox, indicates that goods will be furnished people of this area in such quantities that will induce buying in that line. Certainly it is refreshing to see the faith that these firms place in the area at this time.

More and more, people from other states, large cities, in fact, seek such a place as this area. From the congested areas of the east and much of the south, the people are seeking freedom from the stifling competition seen in those areas, and this area seems to hold the answer.
