ceived by externals as the average adolescent? These friendships should be used by parents as so much education in the judgment of character. No serious harm is likely to come unless the parents, by an uncompromising attitude, drive the adolescent out of his own home and force him to meet these undesirable individuals secretly.

"There is the guidance in moral development which is very important. We would have no good citizens without this guidance. If people did not know the difference between right and wrong, nothing would be run properly. They must be taught about God to create high moral standards. How much better off our nation would be if the criminals had been taught about God in their early lives.

"Here is a brief account of a criminal who had not had this guidance: He killed a man and was sentenced to die for it. As he waited in his cell for the time of his execution, his mother came and wanted to see him. But he said: "No! I don't want to see her. No, I do not want to see her." Thus a son turned against his mother because of her lack of guidance.

"The home is the cradle of good citizens. And it develops good citizens through material welfare, love and guidance."
