Polio Funds Heavily Drained In Eastern Oregon In 1947 Scare

Malheur county has received a $6000 check from the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis to pay for medical care and hospitalization of 25 persons stricken with infantile paralysis in 1947, Felix A. Montes, state representative of the national organization announced in Portland. The average cost of a polio case today is estimated at $2000.

Judge Robert D. Lytle, Malhues county chapter chairman, requested the aid after chapter funds from last year's March of Dimes were exhausted. One-half of the money collected in the annual polio fund drive in January is allotted to the National Foundation for research, education and the epidemic aid fund.

Since 20 cases of polio per 100,000 population is considered an epidemic, Malheur county experienced a severe outbreak in 1947, with 25 paralytic cases for a population of about 20,000.

Judge Lytle estimated the $6,000 would be needed to pay for treatment of polio patients in the next 60 days, after which the 1948 March of Dimes contributions will be available.
