Homemakers Column

By Aldene N. Roberts, HDA

Hello There!!

Are you coming to Homemakers Day? I hope so because just between you and me it's going to be a good, good day. Next week I'll tell you how it turned out.

There was a 4-H club organization meeting in Brookings last Friday evening. Parents and children met together to plan a summer program of club work. It looks as if there will be four new clubs started, which will make a total of five for the Brookings-Harbor area. Is your child one of the lucky youngsters who will have a chance to do 4-H club work this summer? If not, and you wish he or she were, contact John Ginther who is chairman of Rotary club committee to sponsor 4-H club work in Brookings and Harbor communities. He will help you to decide which club would be best for your child.

It's time for spring Clean-up. Bay 23 to 29 has been set as Curry county clean-up week. By Clean-up we don't mean to clean just where it shows, but to get into the dark, hidden corners where danger lies. Danger from fires and pests.

Edgar A. Guest wrote a poem which fits perfectly into a campaign for spring clean-up. It is Home Hazards:

"The hazards of the home are these:

A knife with sharp edge pointed out,

Small obstacles that no one sees,

The toys the children leave about;

A piece of soap on floor and stair,

Torn rugs which trip unwary feet.

The home, statistics all declare,

Is for more dangerous than the street.

Against the hazards when we roam,

Are signs which warn us to beware.

But all turn careless, when at home,

By thinking surely safety's there.

Through spaces dark we boldly go

Disaster swift and dire to meet,

Though this, by now, we ought to know;

The home's more dangerous than the street.

The hazards of the road we fear.

The hazards of the home we scorn.

We're careful when the signs are clear

But heedless when there's none to warn.

We've marked the curves where danger waits

Lest proper caution be forgot,
But once within the family gates
At home we're all a careless lot."

Local News Items

Mrs. May Stafford returned last week from a trip to Portland accompanied by Mrs. Lew Hirsch who is visiting here this week. Mrs. Stafford visited many greenhouses during this trip, checking upon the recent Easter sale of lilies. Several of the growers reported that they lacked thousands of plants to fill their orders. Mrs. Stafford and Mrs. Hirsch are returning to Portland next week where Mrs. Stafford will help put on a display of croft lilies at Olds Wortman and Kings big store upon invitation from the manager of the establishment.

Mrs. Evelyn Essley and infant daughter were brought from the hospital the latter part of the week and they are remaining at the Herbert Payne home until she has regained her strength.
