A Eulogy

As the fragrance of lovely flowers, so will linger long in Brookings, the sweet memory of Margaret Aune Tisdale.

She loved Brookings, and Brookings loved her.

Her warm and friendly nature loved the friendliness for which Brookings is so well known, and the rare charm of her personality won for her many friends.

In the peace of our silent hills, in the grandeur of our rugged coast lines, and in the ever changing lights and hues on the far blue sea, her artist's soul found a ready response.

When she spoke, it was as if rivers of sweet music flowed.

When Margaret Aune Tisdale sang all Brookings delighted. The lyric of her cultured and bird-like tones came through ever smiling lips and she sang from the depths of her soul. The music of her songs will echo down the years in Brookings.

In her, the gaiety and buoyancy of a girl walked hand in hand with the grace and poise of a woman.

Her laugh was like clear water flecked with sunshine.

Grace in her movements matched the grace of her rare and lovely nature.

Memorials to her are the superb workmanship of her photographic art, accomplished through her fine discernment of others, and her love for them.
Brookings is poorer without think how far it is—since she lingers there."
