He Did It For "Piece Of Silver"

A man's vanity, his desire to get his copy into print at so much per column inch has caused Brookings Chamber of Commerce no end of embarrassment the past two weeks.

The Pilot is not trying to down one person at the exoneration of another, but resulting from the desire to get stories in print has caused two and possibly three resignations from the board of directors of the chamber. These men will not even assume a defensive attitude—will not come out with a statement.

It was a shock to many local people, those who are subscribers to Oregon Journal, to read in that newspaper that the chamber was opposing the harbor building at Gold Beach. So far as the Pilot was able to learn, there never had been any discussion on this subject, as a chamber, or by its board of directors.

The first inkling that something was amiss came with the letter published last week in these columns, condemning this action. At this beginning the Pilot did what investigating possible, and found few knowing anything about any action, especially that supposed to have been taken by the chamber.

Chamber action, like any other community effort, should come from the majority. What has happened, it seems, cannot be traced to even a minority—if that is the word for it.

Compassion Still Remains In Man

Despite tales to the contrary, there still is some compassion left in the world. Proof of this statement may be attested by the fact that half of San Marino turned out to rescue little Cathy Fiscus, who died Friday in an abandoned well, despite all efforts to save.

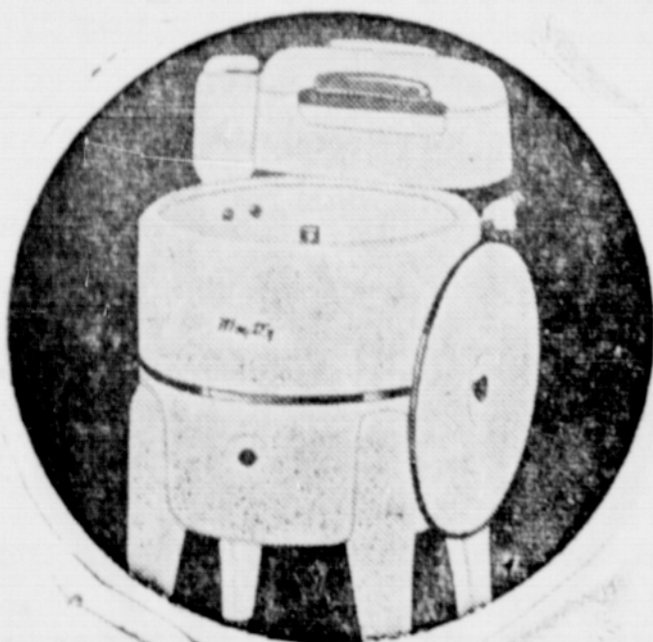

Witness the nation-wide interest brought about through the radio, television and the newspapers. Witness also the appearance, from places unknown, the machinery employed in the frantic and futile digging of another shaft. Rental of all the facilities at hand might have cost several thousand dollars an hour. Men from all walks of life who worked almost the entire 48 hours.

Little Cathy was not reached in time, but it was not meant to be that way. Human endurance and ability were insufficient, but it must be said that the spirit was there in untold quantity.

There still remains much compassion in the world—but it seems to be such catastrophes to bring it out in the open.
