Must Continue Future Festivals Here!

Many times in the past couple of years it has often been heard that "Brookings should de-emphasize the Azalea Festival," and put more effort to the making the Lily Blossom Week the "big" event of the year for the community. This remark, to the Pilot, would be all right if the word "de-emphasize" were left out.

The Pilot will not any other position that the Lily Event has more commercial value for the area as a whole because much of the community's economy is derived from lilies. But, the Pilot raises these points for consideration:

It seems that the state of Oregon is more proud of our Azalea State Park than this area. This may be attested by the fact that this beauty spot is included in most all state advertising.

Through hard work and much effort Azalea Garden Club has convinced people of Southwest Oregon and Northern California that the Festival Flower Show is an institution of note.

This area is noted for its flowers. To pick one flower for exploiting over all others will not do the community justice as far as Oregon and other states are concerned.

Ladies of the Garden Club Caravan, visitors at the Flower Show Saturday afternoon were almost unanimous in their praise of the flower show being made as much a national institution as may be seen at Oakland, at New York, and most any large city.

Sidney Armer, artist of national repute, told the Pilot that New York state would give half of its wealth to possess what the west coast, especially this section, boast of. They would certainly put forth capital and effort to make it national in appeal.

The azalea festival is not tainted with commercialism—it is a display of nature as about only this community knows.

Quoting Mrs. Shearer, California Garden Club President: "This community has all the assets of becoming world-famous without expending but a few dollars for national advertising."
