Retired Portland Policeman In Co.

GOLD BEACH—Mr. and Mrs. William E. Robson of Portland are visiting Mrs. Robson's brother, Frank Hedderly and family. Mr. Robson, retired last week after being with the Portland police for 48 years. He joined the force on Oct. 15, 1901, and served in practically every capacity, being superintendent of the city jail at the time of his retirement.

The Robsons have their home in Portland and at Gearhart. The new Buick delivered to start their vacation has been giving them better than 20 miles to the gallon more than any Mr. Robson has driven in the year he has been driving them. William has been so busy serving the public that he has no hobbies and is in the market for a good one.

Baptist Church

Many everywhere worships a God. From within the deepest depths of the heathen nation to the most civilized nation man worships a God. But we who have experienced faith in God worship the true God. The Lord's Day was given to that end that man may worship God. So again, we invite you to come to worship with the rest of the congregation next Sunday at Baptist Community church. The subject of the message in the morning will be: "Now Are We the Sons of God?"

The young people will meet at 6:30 p. m.

During the last three Sunday nights the pastor has used for his general subject "The Superiority of Christ." Sunday night for his message he will use for his subject: "The Superiority of the Bible." There is no book equal to the Bible in its content and message. Come and hear this inspirational message.

A Tale of Two Pullman Porters

(Lifted editorial, written by)
By George Peck

Dickens wrote his "Tale of Two Cities" but this is a short, short story of two Pullman porters whom we encountered some time ago on a hurried trip from New York to a distant city and return.

Porter, number one, was lord and master of the car which carried us from New York. He was friendly, co-operative and most solicitous of our comfort. He made our journey a pleasant one—an extra pillow on the bed in case we wished to prop ourselves up while reading ourselves to sleep—as the upper berth was not being used, he hauled down the mattress and put it on the lower bed for our greater comfort—he put our hat in a paper bag for its protection—in the morning we found our shoes resplendently shined instead of the customary daub and smear. All these things and a dozen others he did beyond what was required of him by his boss—the Pullman Company. Net result—he got a generous tip.

By strange coincidence we drew the same car and the very same room for the return journey to New York but not the same porter. Here we met porter, number two. This fellow didn't even perform the duties assigned to him by the Pullman Company. Desiring to turn in, we rang several times for him to come to make up our bed. Getting no response, finally we called on the conductor for help who found the porter asleep in one of the vacant rooms. Apparently he resented being disturbed for he made up our bed in a slovenly manner—no thought of double mattresses or an extra pillow and in the morning our shoes were a mess. Net result—he got a very small tip.

Now here were two men, working for the same company, in the same identical location, with the same tools and equipment. One cheerfully performed the duties required of him, plus—the other shirked his responsibilities with no thought of extras. Both had equal opportunities.

We will wager a new ten-gallon Stetson against your last summer's straw hat that porter, number one, owns a nice little home somewhere; has a fine wife and family; that his children are well-fed and clothed and are getting a good education; that he has a nest-egg laid by in a savings bank and has an equity in life insurance; and that he is an asset to the community in which he lives.

We would also like to bet a hundred dollar bill against a plugged nickel that porter, number two, if married, has his wife and family domiciled in wretched quarters; that they are poorly fed and clothed; and that he has nothing put aside for a rainy day or old age. No doubt, he is envious of his fellows; complains bitterly of his lot and harangues against the inequalities and unfairness of the American system.

Two men on the same job, enjoying equal opportunity — one prospering, the other a failure. Yet, there are those who suggest that this thrifty fellow be penalized by giving a part of his well-deserved gains to the underserving malinger. Our opinion is that this is wrong. What do you think about it?

The care and feeding of telephones

Telephones, like any other equipment, work best when properly cared for. So if you want to get more and better service from your telephone instrument, just follow these simple suggestions.

1. Always replace the receiver carefully.
2. Be sure your telephone is on a firm desk or table where it is not likely to be knocked off.
3. Be careful to keep your telephone cord straight and even. Too much twisting can damage the wire.
4. Never leave your telephone near an open window where it can be damaged by the weather.
