

BOWL GAMES INTEREST FANS OVER HOLIDAYS

Radio listeners in this area, during that portion of the game when power was available for the listening, were anything but pleased at the way Ohio State man-handled the Golden Bears of University of California, to average a defeat by California on January 1, 1921, the first meeting of the two teams in the Rose Bowl.

California started off like it was going to trample Ohio into the turf at the Bose Bowl, with an apparent safe 7-0 lead at the half. However, California had, at that time, spent her power, for the second half was definitely Ohio State. California lost her golden opportunity to win in the early moments of the fourth quarter, only to be held for downs 26 yards out. Ohio's interception of California passes spelled the defeat, for the second time of the Golden Bears in Rose Bowl attempts in two years.

Puritanical manipulation of the Pacific Coast conference in the past decade has been the only reason for this decline in western football, which, for the three previous ones, dominated the gridiron of the United States. The East-West game, last Saturday, in which the west team suffered a humiliating defeat, is indicative of the "de-emphasis" plan for football in the west.

Dream Of White Christmas Came Just Week Late

Children of this area, not accustomed to seeing snow, but who sang the song, "I Am Dreaming of a White Christmas," realized their wish—Just a week late.

Sometime Sunday night—snow, so seldom seen except at higher elevations in this county, began to fall. This vicinity had, before nine in the morning, some three or more inches of whiteness.

Wild whoops—flying snow balls and snow men soon were seen. The banana belt Monday, saw its first evidence of winter—a novel experience to many of the banana-skinned youngsters.

Likewise thin-skinned water pipes could not take the sudden cold snap, for many homes were without water Tuesday morning when the thermometer dipped into the twenties.

Jim Rulla Takes Own Life Dec. 11

Jim Rulla, former resident of Brookings, who moved to Salem about two years ago, was reported to have taken his own life, Dec. 11, the news coming to Brookings last Friday.

His wife, formerly employed at the Brookings postoffice, now resides at Dundee, where she went following marital trouble while here. It is said that it was because no reconciliation could not be affected, that Jim took his life. No further details were learned by the Pilot, except that early in December his copies of the paper were turned back by the Salem postoffice.

Couple Injured As Car Spins In Bridge

Mr. and Mrs. Joe Moss, returning from the dance at Smith River, about 11:30 p. m. Saturday, had a painful experience at the Winchuck bridge, when the car they were driving spun around on the frosty surface, caving in both front fenders and headlights, and bending a rear fender. The hood was driven into the cowl some inch or more. Mrs. Moss suffered a painful bruise and possible rib fracture, while her husband sustained a gash on his forehead when the car swung into the railing. The steering wheel was broken as he was hurt.

The car, however, was able to come into town on its own power. This accident is about the fifth in the past couple of years, reported by the Pilot.

Oregon Farmers Designed This Home

By telling what they wanted most in their "dream" farmhouse, 50 Oregon farm families had a hand in designing this farm home. They did it by telling Oregon State college extension service rural housing specialists how a "good" farmhouse should be arranged.

Result of suggestions offered by Oregon farm families is Oregon Farmhouse Plan No. 149, plans for which are available through Oregon State college.

Every foot of this 1,536 square foot house is geared to good farm family living. It has three bedrooms, each with a door opening from a hall near the bath. The living-dining area is free of traffic lanes and is lighted on three sides by picture windows.

Like all well-planned farmhouses, this plan calls for a front door facing the drive. The kitchen also overlooks the driveway and has a desirable southeast exposure in addition to a commanding view of the farm buildings.

Farm housewives voted for this kitchen because it has a step-saving "U" arrangement. Adjoining workroom provides space for a home freezer, laundry facilities, and a convenient space for menfolks to wash as they come in from the barn of fields.

This home may be built with or without a basement. If the basement is not to be included, it is simple to extend the workroom to include the space occupied by the basement stairs. Bedrooms are all large and are designed to include handy wardrobe closets with sliding doors. A closet near the back door is included as storage space for rubber boots, overshoes, and work clothing.

Plans for this farmhouse include seven sheets of drawing. In writing for plans ask for plan number 149 and send $2.10 to the Oregon Farmhouse Plan Service, Oregon State college.

ANNUAL DANCE, SATURDAY, JANUARY 21, AT GRANGE HALL

DON'T LET THE 'ADS' DECEIVE YOU!

Undoubtedly you saw the holiday liquor ads. Here's just a sample: "Good Reason To Cheer This Christmas . . . Old Blank can help you add new laurels to your holiday hospitality." "For a Merry Christmas There Is Nothing Better in the Market;" "The Christmas Gift That Best Says 'The Best of Everything to you';" "Obviously Welcome . . . Known by the Company it Keeps." A few stories from the holiday papers demonstrate how alcoholic beverages brought holiday cheer to America again this year:

HOLIDAY CHEER!

OAKLAND, Dec. 25—Leslie E. Welling arrested on charges of manslaughter and drunken driving in connection with death of pedestrian. Welling was driving a machine which struck three persons, fatally injuring one.

FRESNO, Dec. 23—Paul Gutierrez, convicted sex-murder of 17-months old Josephine Yanez, admitted the slaying today. "The devil must have gotten into me," he said. "I have a little boy myself and if anyone did that to him, I would kill him." Gutierrez attributed the murder to his use of marijuana and liquor and sounded a warning to others to avoid their use.

CHICAGO, ILL., Dec. 26 —

Bruce Meeks, 19, shot a 7-year-old girl in a tavern robbery and was quoted by police as saying: "I was half drunk and didn't know what I was doing."

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 24 — More than 650 tipsy celebrators, including 210 drunk drivers, filled drunk tanks in Los Angeles jails to capacity in the city's "wettest" pre-Christmas revelry. Five traffic deaths were reported and seven persons were injured in accidents involving drunk drivers. All leaves and vacations were cancelled for policemen, deputy sheriffs and state highway patrolmen in an attempt to keep casualties at a minimum during the annual binge.

Yes, Indeed! The Christmas gift that says the "best of everything to you." "Obviously Welcome . . . Known by the company it keeps."
