History Will Include John VanPelt

John VanPelt, a pioneer of this area, who lived in a quiet way all his life, who valued his word being as good as his bond, has bid adieu to the scenes of his childhood, leaving friends who will not soon forget that friendly face, that quick wit, and that genuine love of mankind which he was so willing to give and show. When the history of this area, and southwest Oregon is written in full, the name of John VanPelt is likely to be prominently mentioned in many places, for his father, for whom his was named, came to Corry county in 1853, became a part of the building of the west where he left his descendants.

Maybe John VanPelt never did anything to blazen headlines on the press of the country, but he had accomplished much in a section which was little known to the outside world. John VanPelt reared his family in a way which speaks for itself. He did his part in all things just as much as if he had been a statesman.

Oregon Can Develop Its Resources

In a democracy there always is and perhaps always has been a tendency toward duplication in governmental agencies. Certainly in recent years that trend has pyramided to a new and quite astounding rate and extent. However, to the Pilot there is one ray of sunshine, hope as it were, that the upward trend is about to be broken, changed right here in the state of Oregon.

Oregon is one of the few remaining states in the union which has most of its resources yet untouched, yet to develop. None, for that matter, have been actually developed to any great extent. At this same moment, too, Oregon is faced with and experiencing a problem of immigration, likes of which has never been seen in the history of the nation, not excepting the first settlements in the west in the middle nineteenth century. This deserves thought.

Oregon's resources, as yet quite undeveloped, and in many cases, untouched, are being faced with exploitation, faced with ruin, unless careful consideration is placed on the handling of these resources to do the most good to the most people.

Oregon citizens are urged to study a forthcoming measure to create an Oregon "Resources Board," under which all resources will come to be developed correctly, to be used with wisdom.

The Pilot urges its readers to obtain a copy of this proposed measure, study its contents and at the coming general election in November to act in the way which will bring Oregon into its own in the world's economy by voting for creation of this resources board for the people of this great state. More will be said of this!

Bulb Growers Are "Business Men"

The Pilot was reminded, last Wednesday evening, of a definite change to the good being experienced in this area, when the bulb growers of three states met in the first quarterly meeting of Pacific Bulb Growers Association. The Pilot noted these things:

Today, bulb growers see the value of uniting, of planning, of improving their lot and planting stock.

The growers today seek more and more the new methods of bulb culture better to produce the best product.

Bulb growers today see the side of the florist and are now striving to become his "fellow-worker."

Growers today think more in terms of economics and reasearch in theis business, so as to produce the crop at a point near the peak, yet within reach of the common people.

Pacific Bulb Growers Association has accomplished almost the impossible—it has unified the industry and will keep it free from exploitation. Better floriculture will be the goal.

Gone is that individualism that wrecked the industry in 1947, and in its place has risen stability, has come a business.

Florists all over the world should be proud of the association, and should cultivate its acquaintance henceforth.

We Can Have A Real "Show Place"

The Pilot looks forward to the work of landscaping of the local school grounds, under guidance of Azalea Garden Club, and of the added beauty it will bring to this community. It is with much anticipation that these columns speak for a co-operation of all residents of this area to give, either in labor or in money.

In this section where floral exhibits are up for 12 months each year, the local school grounds could easily become the county's great "show place." Paul DeBlock is noted for this artistry in landscaping. This, no doubt, will be his masterpiece.

The present barren school yard will, after this work is complete, become a park like one is likely to see in Portland, Seattle or any metropolitan city where money is lavished freely to accomplish. Here, the great task will be arrangement—the plants are already here in profusion. Don't you feel a thrill, too?

IT SEEMS TO ME:

By Dewey

People on their knees, following long rows of lilies, seems to be the picture one sees while driving about the area these days—after more than a week of rainless skies. Rains of the past few months have made everything in the ground grow out of hand. It will be no small task to overcome this head start.

Lilies, and other floral crops of the area now seems to be stabilized so that I personally predict that the state and the entire west will soon look to this immediate area for its flowers—especially in the winter. Growers in this area, now, are more inclined to work as a unit than they were a few years ago. It is therefore my prediction that flowers will become a million-dollar crop in this county soon.

I was more than gratified last Wednesday evening to note the new harmony existing among the bulb growers of the three western states, Washington, Oregon and California. It was refreshing to see how each accepted the problems of others as problems of their very own. To me that means that stability has come to stay, and to grow.

I noted, too, how everyone in the industry was interested in maintaining a certain production scale, how all were so interested in the improvement of the floral crops, and how the group was trying to understand the problems of the greenhouses and the trying to understand the prob- of this area. I am confident now that there will be a unity and eventual big growth of this area.

The answers to everyday Insurance Problems

By Pete Lesmeister

Question. In applying for a fire insurance policy on our home should we include the garage? We also have small garden tool shed and would like to know whether it should be included.

Answer. If the garage is attached to the house, it should be included in the total sum of insurance on the main building. If the garage is separate from home, it should be insured separately for its own value. This also applies to the tool shed.

If you'll address your own insurance questions to this office, we'll try to give you the correct answers and there'll be no charge or obligation of any kind.
