

Pelicans Drop Heart-Breaker, Sunday, In First Game Of Season In 8 to 6 Score

Brookings Pelicans, in their first game of the league play, dropped a heart-breaking 8-6 game, Sunday to Myrtle Creek on their diamond. The Pelicans, hit by an epidemic of flu, had but nine men present, short of reserve and regular strength.

Myrtle Creek exploded for four big runs in the bottom of the seventh and went on to edge out the Pelicans by an 8 to 6 tally in a really good game.

The Pelicans, with only nine men being able to make the trip and probably presenting the weakest lineup for their season to date, fought gamely and seemed probable winners with a 5 to 2 lead going into the fatal seventh inning.

Bob Astin, on the mound for the Pels, looked good for the first six innings. In the seventh, however, the first batter greeted him with a single and then Lou Kotnik who received a try-out with the St. Louis Browns this spring and also worked out with the Portland Beavers the past week, belted a long home run far over Hanscam's head for the first two runs of the inning. This apparently un-nerved Astin as he walked the next two batters. After an intervening sacrifice, both walks became runs when Palmer, Myrtle Creek catcher, came through with a clutch hit. Bob retired the next two hitters, but ran into further trouble in the last of the eighth. After one out Kotnik hit a long triple and scored on a subsequent single by Ulam. Hank Westbrook relieved Astin at this stage and while he did not allow a hit, Ulm scored for the last Myrtle Creek run on an alleged balk by big Hank.

The Pels scored their final run in the top of the ninth and left two runners stranded as Hanscam was called out on strikes.

The Ashland club, which defeated Grants Pass, 15-2, Sunday, comes to Brookings next Sunday for the home opener. While at least two college players which Business Manager Pete Lesmeister lined up on his trip to Portland last week will not be available until early in June, it is expected the Pelicans will present at least a somewhat strengthened lineup for Sunday's game. Hassetts Part Of Azalea Festivals

To Mr. and Mrs. F. B. Hassett goes quite a distinction. Everyone of their five daughters have been identified with an Azalea Festival. Before the war, and before a court was elected, Marie and Martha Hassett were often photographed among azaleas, and these photos were used in national advertising.

In the first festival following the war, June, now of Kodiak, Alaska, was a princess; Ruth followed her in last year's court as princess. This year, Leta, the last Hassett girl, was elected the queen.

Nearest approach to this comes Mrs. Mildred Byrne, whose daughters, Joan, and Margaret were on the court last year, Joan as queen and Margaret as princess.
