POSSIBLY NEW INCOME SOURCE

It was called to the Pilot's attention this week that this area has found a new industry—that of raising white clover for seed. While the per-pound receipts are exceedingly high, the greatest profit to the grower will come from the hay it will produce for cattle, especially milk cows, and the amount clover will build up the fertility of the soil. People who have land which has been "sapped" by lily growing, should investigate this new crop.

WATCH CHILDREN MOTORISTS!

Children, impulsive, unpredictable, daring, are "nightmares" to motorists, not only here, but in all cities over the nation. The burden of the caution, therefore, must rest with the motorists, as he approaches those zones marked "School Crossings."

Usually, children when singly or in small groups, will be found cautious on the streets and highways, but when the motorist sees a group of a half dozen or more, he must remember that children are carrying on some conversation, and lose sight of everything else about them. Adults are also inclined that way.

Those yellow signs, painted on the pavement have a definite meaning, motorists must remember. Responsibility for an accident at these designated spots always places the responsibility on the motorist in more than 90 per cent of cases.

What can the adults do about it? Just be careful—that's all.

IT SEEMS TO ME:

By Dewey

In looking over the exhibits at Curry County fair, I noted that the quantity and quality were considerably better than last year, and the competition was more keen between communities. This much was good, but I'd like to offer a suggestion to the fair board, not from a critical point of view, just a suggestion: Leave the exhibits up for at least three hours longer on the last day.

From this area there were scores of people who were unable to get to the fair except on Sunday, and many of them missed out on the displays because so many were in the process of being dismantled. These people asserted to me that they were disappointed, and if next year the same practice was followed, they would not attend. Personally, I believe they have a point. I, too, was unable to see all the displays for the same reason.

Eventually, I presume, all the details will be ironed out, and the fair will claim the place in Curry County life that it really should. It has been getting increasingly better the years I've lived in the county.

Kenneth Thompson and his board of directors cannot be criticized for they did all in their power to make this year's fair better. I actually believe it has showed the greatest improvement of any fair over the previous one. Kenneth certainly did devote plenty of time to his job as manager.

That fire at Pistol River gave all of us southern Curry residents the scare of our lives, as we drove home Sunday evening. The smoke was almost choking for distance of about a mile, as the jack-pine needles and old scrub trees of the area threw out the most pungent odor.

Forestry officials were uneasy also for they had two fire patrol wagons out immediately. It is no easy job to fight such a fire, and the terrain was bad for fighters due to its sandiness.

I'd like to warn all car drivers to watch out for school children especially in those places marked "School Crossing." Those unpredictable youngsters—those impulsive citizens of tomorrow do not always heed the traffic rules—they do not always think of the hazards. You are an adult and the responsibility must be all yours.

I believe the worst I ever was scared was in front of the local postoffice about a year ago. I'd driven in that afternoon to get the mail. As I was backing out, I noticed a high school boy, on a bicycle, almost upon me. I put on the brakes, and pulled ahead, but I wasn't quick enough. He hit the car with his bike. He was watching someone on the sidewalk.

Clover Seed Trial Proves Profitable

White clover seed is a paying crop for this area, it was proven by Dr. A. O. Schmitt and Archie McVay just recently, when the two harvested between 600 and 700 pounds of the seed on a plot just about an acre and one-half.

Dr. Schmitt told the Pilot he had been experimenting with the seed for a few years, and felt that its production was one of this area's big crops. The seed sells for $7.50 per pound, he said.

The two men bought a five-ft. combine harvester to thresh the seed, and expect to go into the production in a bigger way in the future.

Despite the clover is allowed to ripen for threshing, the hay may be saved and used for feed of any stock. It is highly nutritious feed, it is said.

"The good thing about white clover," said Dr. Schmitt, "is that it builds up the fertility of the soil, which in this country has been depleted quite seriously by lily growing. Proper crop rotation, with clover, using this as a money crop, too, people of this area can open up new avenues of money crops, including revival of dairying on a big scale."
