

Pilot "Pictures" Create Interest In News Illustrations

In recent issues of the Pilot, amply supplied with pictures to illustrate news stories, interest has run exceedingly high, and all available copies of the issues have been sold out completely—despite the fact that more copies have been printed each time.

Especially attracting interest with the story of D. M. "Bullhide" Moore, pioneer merchant of Gold Beach, who rounded out a long merchantile career last May. Interest in the recent Parade of Quartets was given impetus by the publication of all available pictures of the participants.

The Pilot seeks pictures of all events possible, which would be of great value to illustrate the articles. These pictures may not always be published in the week of happening.

Pictures must be glossy prints, of plenty of contrast, for lack of this attribute would result in a poor newspaper picture.

Fishing Craft Lost In Recent Storm

PORT ORFORD—During the recent stormy week-end a distress call was received at the coast guard station from Kelly J, 45-foot fishing boat, out of fuel and lost at sea. Arthur Hinderlie, officer in charge, said this station could not answer the call because Nelly's Cove was full of heavy drift and packed with seaweed from the storm, making it impossible to launch the lifeboat.

According to A. C. Shaffer, in charge of Cape Blanco lighthouse, Kelly J radioed its position as off St. George reef, but the coast guard tug, Yacona, of Eureka, could not locate the craft after trying several hours. When the Kelly J described its surroundings it was discovered that it was directly off Cape Blanco, close to the rocks, having drifted there during the stormy night. Later when the Yacona reached it, fuel was taken on as it was felt that it could navigate under its own power.

This proved impractical and a tow line was put aboard and the crew of two taken on the tug. Coast guard cutter, Bottom, of Coos Bay, reportedly came to stand by in case additional aid was needed. All craft received terrific buffeting from the high winds and seas. It is said that ten miles north of the cape the Kelly J began shipping too much water and sank.

Only a few days after the storm, Nelly's Cove was again free of the pack of drift and seaweed, which was, according to Hinderlie, the worst seen in may years.

LOCAL NEWS

The sixth annual Veterans Informal Party, and pot luck will be held at the V. F. W. hall, Saturday, Nov. 11, according to plans revealed Monday. All veterans and their kin are invited.

After announcing, last week, there would be no teachers institute, flood waters receded sufficiently for travel, so at the last moment the teachers decided to attend, the grade school at Coquille and the high school to Eugene.
