

There are times when even the most devoted of brides feel a wild desire to wallop their beloved with the nearest available object. For fifteen minutes I had been patiently watching Jeff wander silently from room to room picking up articles and putting them down, rattling doorknobs, poking in cabinets. Finally, in as polite a tone as I could muster I inquired:

"Looking for something?"
"Just curious," he volunteered at last. "I wondered how many items we have around here made of copper. You know, with the silent butler, plant holders, trays, fireplace stuff, doorknobs, and I don't know what all, we have enough copper to start a small war!"

"No, thank you," I put in firmly. "But that's exactly where copper is going," Jeff replied, "because without it our fighting men would simply have to give up! That red metal is vital to practically all modern weapons. Furthermore," he said, warming up to the subject, "we take so much copper in this country for peacetime uses that about one third of our requirements have to be imported."

It finally developed that Jeff had read an article describing a new government copper order effective March 1st which will prohibit the manufacture of more than three hundred items using copper and its alloys. What piqued Jeff's curiosity was that the article declared the order would affect every American. He pointed out the truth of this statement by listing a few of the prohibited items such as jewelry, dress ornaments, and decorative accessories used in homes. Even more important, the ban will reach many fields including building which depends heavily on copper for hardware, for roofing materials such as flashing, gutters and downspouts, and for pipe and tube in plumbing systems.

We discussed the situation at length and I forgot about earlier urges toward mayhem. Only why did he act male-like and explain the picture after he poked into everything? I had thought he was bad after all!

I Sell The Earth!

To put it politely—I'm disturbed. To put it honestly—I'm peeved!

The objects of my anger are those speechmakers and writers who now say the washing machine is a luxury and that, accordingly, its production should be halted in favor of defense production and the continued output of certain "essential" civilian products.

I am perfectly willing to give up the luxuries of peacetime life if it is going to help our nation in these perilous times. But I strongly disagree with anyone who says that washing machines are luxuries.

I'm sure that you, as homemakers, will agree with me. You will, if you're like Mrs. Richmond, who lives in our block and is a very busy young mother of three small children. When I asked her what she'd do without a washing machine, she replied:

"I'd just have to throw in the sponge."
Then I began thinking: "Just why is the washing machine so necessary?"

The most important reason is to keep our families and homes clean. Cleanliness is the foundation of health, and good health is a prime requisite for high morale, a vital ingredient for personal and national success either in peace or war.

At least seven out of every 10 American housewives do the family washing at home, where they have no choice but to use a washing machine. That is, unless you can possibly consider a return to great-grandmother's scrubboard as an alternative.

The fact that I have a new washing machine doesn't serve one bit to cool my indignation over statements that production of the "luxury" washing machine may have to be discontinued.

Recently I read that more than 40 per cent of the washing machines now in use are 10 or more years old and in need of early replacement. In still another article I read that each year an average of 1,180,000 washers are becoming useless and are being junked.

It is important to everyone that these machines be replaced, for the health and cleanliness of the people with whom we associate is as important to us as the health and cleanliness of our own families.

It's my own opinion that it's of vital importance, too, to the entire nation. History proves that one of the surest ways to weaken a nation is to first weaken the unity and strength (and that means health) of the family.

I, for one, am going to write my congressman!
