A really great job of clearing the air is being done in the senate hearings which were precipitated by the dismissal of Gen. MacArthur. Although the Congress has been proceeding with routine legislation and would ordinarily be making some routine news, that has been shoved off the front page to make way for the reporting of the really big news being made by the senate committees.

The foreign policy thinking, the policies and the actions of our administration are being examined. Even the calibre and ability of our responsible officials is being revealed by their own testimony. It seems to me the senators have done a remarkable job, also, in keeping partisanship to a minimum. The dismissal of MacArthur is being treated, as it should be, as an incident—one of the series of events—rather than an event of major importance itself. The senators and the people of our country are getting the facts, and from the highest possible possible sources. For the first time since 1945, when we started appeasing communism and Kremlin, the spotlight of a genuine inquiry is searching out the facts.
