On display this week at Dinty Moore's are two unusual flowers. A rose, with three rows of petals, striped in pink and red, surrounding a beautiful yellow center. Perusal of the rose catalogs indicates its probable name, "York and Lancaster," of which Shakespeare said, "The rose, nor red nor white, but stolen of both." The other, on a branch of columbula bearing two conventional blossoms has on the third stem a freak or "sport."

Out of a seed head have sprung a myriad of small daisy-like blossoms, bearing little resemblance to its host. Both are from Mimi Aldropp's garden.
