

For What It's Worth .

By CLIFFORD P. ROWE

Of all the holidays that grace the calendar, my favorite is Valentine's day. For on this occasion the giving of gifts is truly an offering from the heart to those we love; there is no checking of lists to see if we are missing someone whom custom demands that we remember.

From the tousle-headed freckle-faced first-grader who slyly slips his home made heart into the class box to the balding adult who paces the floor of his place of business wondering if the florist has delivered the roses to his wife, love reigns supreme on this one day of the year.

The gift's value is one of no importance on this occasion. This is probably the only day in the year when the gift itself is put aside until the accompanying message has been read. For this is the time when many a wound allowed to go unhealed for months receives the miracle drug in the form of the simple prescription "I love you."

This is the day when many a wife who has been worrying for fear her husband was coming to look upon her as merely the family cook, opens her envelope excitedly and feels her face flushed with school girl excitement as she reads in a familiar hand the words "You are still the sweetest Valentine in all the world." With stars in her eyes and tears on her cheeks, she puts it way among her keepsakes of years to bolster her in later moments of uncertainty.

Certainly it is fitting that one day of the year should be put aside to encourage the love of tomorrow, to strengthen that of today, and to perpetuate the memory of that of yesterday. For man and woman must need be made to remember that wealth, fame, or position can never be substitutes for the happiness that springs from true love.

WASHINGTON - WEEK -

By Harris Ellsworth, M. C.

"Since the days of the rubber stamp congress of the New Deal, the president and the state department have been ignoring the constitution and the congress by making actual treaties with foreign states which they call agreements, contracts, pacts or by some other weasel word. Treaties by any other name are, nevertheless, treaties. However, the constitution of the United States requires senate ratification only of 'treaties,' so by using a substitute or synonym for the word treaty, dozens of binding, extremely serious and far-reaching commitments have been made without the approval of congress. I believe the Yalta, Teheran and Potsdam agreements could be so classified. The forthcoming so-called 'contracts' with the West German Republic will not, under the same circumstances, have congressional consideration.

"Congress should act at once to put a stop to this cunning evasion of our constitution by the devise of juggling words. I have introduced a bill today which is designed to do just that. I believe the people should know how their lives and property are being obligated and that the United States senate under its treaty ratification powers should have a chance to approve or reject such obligations. My bill would serve the dual and desirable purpose of bringing our commitments to foreign countries into the open and would restore to congress its proper powers."

Mr. Ellsworth's bill: A BILL

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That any pact, contract, convention, protocol, accord, pact, compait, covenant, agreement, understanding, or arrangement hereafter negotiated by and under authority of the United States with a foreign state which (1) imposes any obligation or liability upon the United States, or any citizen thereof, and (2) concerns, in whole or in part, matters which, in relations between the United States and such foreign state, (A) may be made proper subjects of negotiation and treaty, (B) involve a basic policy and course of conduct to be adopted by the United States, or the implementation of such policy or course of conduct, and (C) are clearly severable from subjects of a purely administrative, routine, or minor nature, incidental or essential to the normal conduct of re-

Emily Lookout Was Accident Victim

According to John Porisch, district ranger, Jack E. Nahmens, 18, of Albany was killed in a recent auto accident near San Luis Obispo, Calif. He was riding with four other students on Hwy 101 on their way to Palm Springs for a short vacation when the accident occurred. All were injured except the driver.

Jack was a U. S. forest service lookout on Mt. Emily last summer and made many friends in Brookings and in the country during his stay. He was born at Long Beach, Calif., and moved to Albany with his parents in 1937. He was a pre-dental student at University of California at the time of his death.
